Sources of Information

This edition of the Directory of Mines and Quarries is being produced in a new form, in addition to being published in hard copy, it will now be available as a download from the MineralsUK.com website of the BGS.

The first quarry list produced by the BGS and its predecessors was the Mineral edition of 1858, where, along with the statistical information, Roderick Murchison stated in his foreword that ‘The present publication is the result of a first attempt on the part of Mr. Robert Hunt to collect returns of the produce of the Clay Works and Quarries of the United Kingdom’. The prime object of the volume was to record the building stone quarries operating at the time, and some continuity exists between that volume and this with some of the sites being still recorded. See Figure 1, where, albeit with a slightly unique and possibly phonetic spelling — Locharbridge is found, listed as Locahbriggs in the current edition.

Some of the information being collected is still the same, Geological Formation, operator and location (Nearest Railway Station or Shipping Port) but other information is no longer collected as annual production is now commercially sensitive. Information on which buildings were supplied by the quarry is collected currently by the English Heritage funded Strategic Stone Survey and will be available through the BGS MineralsUK.com webpages.

The production of this edition has been assisted by the Department for Communities and Local Government (DCLG), Scottish Government and Welsh Assembly Government. Much of the data within is based on that collected during the Annual Minerals Raised Inquiry (AMRI) pre-survey of Mineral Planning Authorities for the Office for National Statistics (ONS) and the three government organisations. In addition, mineral operators have been surveyed during 2010 to allow them the opportunity to update the information held by BGS in the BRITPITS database on operational status, commodities worked and end products produced.

The Minerals industry

The United Kingdom* is fortunate in being relatively well endowed with a variety of mineral resources on which extractive industries of considerable economic importance are based. This economic importance can be measured by the Gross Value Added (GVA) of the industries, which represents their contribution to the UK economy. The GVA of the minerals extractive industries is included in the United Kingdom National Accounts under the heading ‘Mining and quarrying’, which includes the extraction of oil and gas. The GVA for ‘Mining and quarrying’ was £37 718 million in 2008, or 2.9 per cent of national GVA. This is an increase of 22 per cent compared to 2007 (which was £30 849 million or 2.5 per cent of national GVA). Within this total, the extraction of oil and gas accounted for £34 633 million, the mining of coal £398 million and other mining and quarrying £2687 million.

* The United Kingdom comprises Great Britain (England, Scotland and Wales) and Northern Ireland; its full name is the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The estimated total value of minerals produced in 2008 in the UK, expressed as sales on an ex-works (quarry) basis as opposed to gross valued added, was £41 835 million, an increase of 24.5 per cent on 2007 as a result of higher prices for oil and gas.

Energy minerals dominate the value of mineral production in the United Kingdom and the major proportion of this output (£38 084 million) is from the UK Continental Shelf. There is, however, a substantial extraction industry onshore, producing coal, some oil and gas, and a wide range of construction and industrial minerals. Onshore mineral production is dominated by aggregates which account for some 75 per cent of the total.

There are over 2000 mines and quarries in Britain with individual turnovers ranging from a few thousand pounds to over one hundred million. These are operated by about 1000 companies. However, the value of mineral production on an ex-quarry basis does not truly reflect the ultimate value of minerals to the national economy. The difference between the ex-quarry price and the delivered price of a mineral can be considerable for large volume, low-value minerals and transporting them to the market place supports an important industry in its own right. In addition, minerals serve as basic inputs to a wide range of downstream industries, including power generation, construction and manufacturing, where the value-added can be many times the cost of the raw material. Indigenously produced minerals make a vital contribution to the competitiveness of these. The extractive industries also provide markets for goods and services from other sectors of the economy.

Due to the current economic conditions in the country, a number of mineral operations have been taken out of operation, either temporarily or permanently. It is likely that some will recommence operations when economic conditions become favourable.

Production of Fluorspar in the UK is likely to cease in 2011 as INEOS Fluor seeks to dispose of Glebe Mines in Derbyshire the last processor of this mineral in the country, smaller, tributaries, will also cease to produce Fluorspar for processing. The company also produces barytes products and lead concentrate and the plant is currently mothballed. In 2008 INEOS was bought by a Mexican chemical producer, Mexichem. The operations are listed here as they were still active in 2010.

Information given

The Directory is derived from a database (BritPits) which contains over 2000 entries for active mineral workings and a much larger number for inactive and former workings, totalling approximately 132 000 entries. Each entry describes an individual onshore mineral working in terms of its name, geographic location, Mineral Planning Authority (MPA), operator, basic geology, mineral produced and, where known, end use of the mineral. In addition, there is a list of mineral workings by MPA and an alphabetically arranged list of company addresses. These include rail depots and wharves for landing of marine-dredged sand & gravel and crushed rock aggregates. The source of these is shown where this is known. The workings shown here have been noted by either the operators or the Mineral Planning Authorities to have been operational in 2010, these may not be currently working, and in addition, there will be newly opened sites in 2011. By producing a downloadable web version of the Directory, it is hoped that speedy updating of the data can be presented in a regular fashion.

The underlying digital BRITPITS database (an abbreviation of British Pits, and the word 'pits' is used here to include both surface quarries and underground mines) was assembled mainly from the records of BGS, MPAs, the minerals industry and various central Government Departments and Agencies (DCLG, Coal Authority etc). These data are available in digital form under licence. Originally, only details of currently active and temporarily inactive sites were included in the database, but because of the importance of former workings for waste disposal, amenity and nature conservation (Sites of Special Scientific Interest, etc.), information is now collected on former operations. The data are held in a relational database using an Oracle server and a Microsoft Access front-end.

While the compilers have tried to ensure that the Directory is as accurate and up-to-date as possible, any derived list of active mines and quarries is a snapshot in time and is inevitably out of date as soon as it is produced. Changes in ownership, moving the extraction location as reserves become exhausted or a new extension starts production, and renaming of sites are regular occurrences and all of these cause problems in maintaining a definitive database. It is perhaps inevitable in a work of this kind that there will be some omissions and inaccuracies. The Directory includes sites which are worked only on an intermittent basis and some of which may be currently inactive, but which still have valid planning consents. Estate quarries and other operations that do not offer material for sale have, however, in most cases been excluded, although these operations have to have planning permission for mineral extraction. The compilers would be pleased to hear from operators who feel they have been inaccurately represented so that details can be corrected in future issues and in the underlying database.

The operations are classified by the type of economic mineral produced, described in terms of the standard commodity names used for mineral raw materials in BGS publications and official statistics. The commodities produced in the UK in 2010 are listed in Table 4. Dolomite is included with limestone, although known dolomite producers are indicated where the mineral product is valued for its magnesia (MgO) content. Shale and other clayey materials used for brick, tile, pipe or cement-making, and for constructional fill, are included with clay. Sand is described as silica sand if it is used for industrial purposes, such as in glassmaking or for foundry use, as distinct from construction purposes, such as in concrete, mortar or asphalt. However, the distinction cannot always be defined with certainty as many operations classified under silica sand may sell a proportion of their output into construction and vice versa. Silica sands are increasingly being used for a variety of horticultural and recreational uses such as dressings for artificial football pitches, and for golf course bunkers where their purity is valued. Operations classified under the heading of sand & gravel include those producing both sand and gravel at the same site as well as a significant number producing sand only. The compilers have attempted to separate those sites only producing sand from those containing gravel. Details of brine (salt) workings and land-based oil and gas wells are also included. For sites where more than one mineral commodity is known to be produced, entries have been made under each commodity.

A mineral working may be known under several names, one given by its operator, one by the MPA, or even a traditional local one, or one relating to the land holding on which it is situated. In the Directory we have generally used the name currently recognised by the operator. However, the reader is cautioned against assuming that quarry names are unique or immutable. Where known, alternative names which differ greatly are given in brackets after the current name. Extensions to sites, or satellite workings are included as separate sites where these have been reported as separate sites by the MPA or operator. In some cases, the operator may consider a number of these workings to be one site, hence only one record of the address and other contact details will be given in the appropriate part of the Directory.

To distinguish between underground and openpit workings, the word 'mine' or 'colliery' is incorporated into the name of every underground operation. Openpit and other operations are generally named by a single term; the word, 'quarry' is not generally used except as part of the address. Exceptions are made where it is felt that the full name confers further information on the product worked. The term 'Opencast Coal Site' or 'OCCS' has been recently superseded by 'Surface Coal Mine'.

The location of each site is described with respect to the MPA within which it occurs. For underground mines the location of the shaft determines the location, although the workings may extend into other administrative areas. Many quarries also straddle administrative boundaries but the quarry is assigned to the administrative area in which it principally occurs and a note made of the other Authority. A six-figure National Grid Reference defines the approximate centre of the working or shaft/adit to the nearest 100 metres. The name of a nearby town or other important geographic location is also given, although this is not necessarily part of the postal address of the site. The postal address may also show a different authority to that shown as the MPA.

The name of the operator is given for each mineral working, although this is not intended to be a definitive company title and, in the case of the larger companies, a recognised abbreviation may be used. If the operator is readily recognised as a subsidiary company the name of the parent company may be given first, followed by the subsidiary. Satellite pits are grouped with the main operation where this is known. If there is more than one operator on a site, or one of the commodities is taken by another operator, this is noted.

Geological details are included for each working, based on the BGS Digital 1:50 000 geological map. The geological information refers to the formation in which the working is believed to be principally located and does not necessarily define the material produced at any particular time. In this context the reader's attention is drawn to BS812: 1984 Testing aggregates. Part 102, Methods for sampling, where consumers of aggregates are cautioned against associating physical or chemical properties with geological descriptions. Quarries may work more than one geological formation simultaneously, although only the main formation is generally listed.

Sedimentary units are described primarily by their geological age and lithostratigraphy. Igneous rocks are described by name where known, or by a simple petrographic term and the geological age is given where known. Other names are given where these are useful. Building stones may also be identified by a non-scientific, commercial rock name, listed in the products, such as 'Hard Yorkshire Sandstone' where the quarry product is known by this term. In cases where newer stratigraphical terms have been applied, reference is made to the former name. Reference may be made to the BGS Lexicon of Named Rock Units which is accessed through the BGS website; www.bgs.ac.uk/lexicon/

Mineral Planning Authorities

An authority with responsibility for planning control, including deciding planning applications, for mineral working is called a Mineral Planning Authority (MPA). In Wales, Scotland and some parts of England, the responsibility for mineral planning resides with the unitary authorities, which deal with all planning issues within the areas for which they are responsible. In those parts of England with two tiers of local government (counties and districts), MPAs are the county councils and National Park Authorities. In Scotland, the Loch Lomond and Trossachs National Park is an MPA as it has authority over local plans and development control; structure plans remain with the 4 local authorities (Argyll and Bute, Perth and Kinross, Stirling and West Dunbartonshire) which it was formed from. Cairngorms National Park is not an MPA. The unitary authorities in England include the London Boroughs and the Metropolitan Borough Councils within former Cleveland, Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire counties, as well as a number of others around major towns in other parts of the country.

Since the last edition of the Directory in 2008, 4 New Minerals Planning Authorities have been formed — Bedford, Central Bedfordshire, from Bedfordshire; Cheshire East and Cheshire West & Chester from Cheshire. In addition, the New Forest National Park is now functioning over parts of Hampshire and Dorset, and the South Downs National Parks will become a full planning authority on 1 April 2011, covering parts of Hampshire, West and East Sussex.

In Northern Ireland, The Planning Service, an agency within the Department of the Environment, is responsible for planning. Applications for mineral extraction are handled by the Special Studies Section (Minerals Unit) based at the Planning Service HQ in Belfast, although directory entries are shown by county to give an indication of geographical variations.

Arrangement

In Part I of the Directory the mineral workings are grouped primarily by the mineral commodity produced, and subsequently by the Region in which they are located in the order England — East Midlands, East of England, North East, North West, South East, South West, West Midlands, Yorkshire and the Humber; Channel Islands; Isle of Man; Northern Ireland; Scotland; Wales. They are then arranged alphabetically by MPA. Within each article, the first line is the name of the quarry or mine, the second line gives a grid reference and the location, the third line specifies the operating company and the final lines includes geological and any other relevant details, including products where known.

Quarries worked as satellites are grouped with the parent site, where this is known.

The National Grid

The National Grid used in this Directory is a widely used map reference system developed by the Ordnance Survey that enables any location to be uniquely defined. The country is divided into 100 km by 100 km major grid squares each of which is defined by means of two letters, e.g. SK represents the 100 km square 400 000 m east of origin, and 300 000 m north of origin. These are further subdivided by gridlines into 1 km squares and numbered from 0 to 99 from the south-west corner in an easterly and northerly direction (these are the grid squares on 1:25 000 or 1:50 000 topographical maps). Hence in any grid reference given in the Directory, the initial letters define the major 100 km square, the next two digits, the 1 km increment eastwards from an origin in the south-west corner of the major square, while the third digit is the 100 m increment within the grid square. The second three digits give the corresponding coordinate northwards from the same origin. Further explanation of the system together with worked examples will be found on the Ordnance Survey website (<http://www.ordnancesurvey.co.uk/oswebsite/gi/nationalgrid/nghelp1.html>) and on Ordnance Survey maps, of which the Landranger Series on the scale 1:50 000 will be found to be a useful companion to this Directory. Northern Ireland forms part of the Irish Grid and has a single letter prefix to denote 100 km major grid squares, e.g. J 236 741.

MineralsUK is the British Geological Survey (BGS) Centre for Sustainable Mineral Development. Facilitated by the BGS Minerals and Waste science programme, the Centre is a global leader in the compilation, provision and analysis of mineral statistics and the major UK national provider of spatial and statistical minerals information. We also carry out research in areas directly relevant to our user community, such as metallogenesis, land-use impacts of mineral extraction and geomaterials.

This website was launched in 1999 to provide information about mineral exploration, mining, quarrying, production and trade. Since then the scope of the website has been broadened and it now includes content on a wider range of issues, such as spatial information on resources, sustainable development, planning information and UK policy and legislation. The content of this website is being continually updated as the industry, legislation and information availability changes. Our objective is to provide users with a portal into the wide-ranging outputs of the BGS MineralsUK Centre for Sustainable Mineral Development and a central focus for minerals information specifically related to the UK scene. Location of Mineral Workings Several maps of major commodities worked in the UK and Northern Ireland are shown here, together with a table listing the numbers of active workings in the UK (Figures 3–8 and Table 4). Please note that more than one commodity may be produced at a single site.

The data presented here are held in the BGS Database of UK mineral workings — BRITPITS — together with details of over 132 000 mineral workings. These can be accessed digitally from www.bgs.ac.uk/mineralsuk/mines/dmq.html. BGS is currently engaged in a systematic survey of former mineral workings which is intended to cover Great Britain by 2014. The extent of the data coverage by the end of 2010 is shown below.

Directory of Mines and Quarries 2010

The following list includes all mineral operations known to have been working in 2010. This inevitably includes some that have ceased operations subsequent to the date of the surveys, which were carried out between August and December 2010. The mineral workings are arranged primarily in alphabetical order of the main commodity produced and subsequently in order of Regions and Mineral Planning Authorities.

Remote subsidiary sites are shown indented below their parent.

The names of lithologies worked or handled in the operation are given, where known, as is the rock type, the age and the name of the formation. In Quaternary materials, the different formations may be distinguished by a numerical suffix, e.g. River Terrace Deposits, 3 (River Blackwater Gravel) and if known by an alternative or previous name, this is given in brackets.

The BGS Lexicon of Named Rock Units can be found here:
<http://bgs.ac.uk/Lexicon/>

Wharfs and rail depots, oil and gas wells, and plants producing desulpho gypsum are listed in this section with as much information as is known.

A number of sites are listed here which recycle aggregates. This is not a full list of such depots, but in the main they are either former quarry sites which are now producing secondary aggregate, or quarry sites where recycling takes place alongside primary aggregate production.

Alphabetical list of operators

The following pages comprise an alphabetical list of mineral operators, their addresses, telephone and facsimile numbers together with their respective operations, when known. Subsidiary operators are listed under the Parent operator where known, indented. In general the main office address of the operator, and appropriate sub-office, is given together with the address of each mineral working. However, where operators have only one operation only one address may be given. Where a mineral working has no permanent telephone or facilities for receiving mail, the appropriate part of the entry is, in general, omitted or curtailed.

Note: some site extensions and satellites may not be listed in this section.
